

WE'RE REOPENING JUNE 29!

Global pandemic, economic hardship, and tragic and needless deaths of black Americans have left us all reeling. The challenges of managing a closed public botanic garden and attempting to reopen safely pale beside the challenges many in our society face. The UCR Botanic Gardens stands with UCR (UCR message) and CNAS (CNAS message) in their statements of support for black lives and solidarity against racism, injustice, and violence in America. We are committed to creating a welcoming, inclusive, and peaceful environment for all those who visit.

We are eager to welcome you back to immerse yourselves in the healing power of nature at the UCR Botanic Gardens. We have worked hard to restore the safety and beauty of the Gardens that were severely impacted by 15 weeks of closure, during which our staffing and work were limited. In the last month as restrictions began to ease we were able to make significant progress readying the Gardens for reopening. You will immediately notice that our roadway was repaved, improving access to the upper parts of the Garden. Some trails have been widened by pruning and weeding bordering plants to facilitate physical distancing. Our Native American ethnobotanical garden has been planted and is flourishing; labels, interpretive signs, and a GIS Story Map are in the works. Recent permission to bring in trusted volunteers has hastened our progress in removing weeds, tending to roses, and other important tasks.

We have also worked hard to develop a robust reopening plan that is guided by science and prioritizes the safety, security, and health of our staff, volunteers, and visitors. The following requirements follow CDC, California Department of Public Health, and UCR guidelines and are designed to insure your health and safety. Our success at reopening, remaining open, and expanding open days and hours depends on your adherence to these requirements.

Phase 2 Reopening Schedule until further notice

Due to limited staffing at this time, our open days and hours will be restricted to the following:

Monday – Friday, 9:00 am – 12:00 noon (gates closed and locked at noon)

All visitors will be expected to exit by 12:00 noon
